William Blair International Small Cap Growth Fund Closing to New Investors on March 31, 2011

CHICAGO, March 14, 2011—William Blair Funds announced today that the William Blair International Small Cap Growth Fund will close to new investors on March 31, 2011. No new International Small Cap Growth Fund shareholder accounts will be accepted after that date.

“The closing of the International Small Cap Growth Fund is consistent with William Blair’s philosophy of controlling asset growth to maintain the integrity of our investment process and performance for our clients,” said Michelle R. Seitz, CFA, head of William Blair Investment Management and a member of the firm’s executive committee.

“When William Blair Investment Management reopened the International Small Cap Growth strategy in late 2008, our International Portfolio Management Team estimated capacity in the strategy to total between $2.0 billion and $2.5 billion. As of December 31, 2010, the team managed nearly $2 billion in the strategy. Given our current new business pipeline, the team believes it is now appropriate to close the strategy to new investment flows,” she said.

The International Small Cap Growth Fund remains open for existing fund shareholders. The fund was started on November 1, 2005, and is managed by Jeff Urbina. Jeff, in turn, is supported by a team of investment analysts, who assist him in identifying promising companies for the fund’s portfolio of investments.

William Blair & Company is the investment adviser to the William Blair International Small Cap Growth Fund, one of 19 no-load William Blair mutual funds. As of February 28, 2011, assets under management in the William Blair funds totaled more than $13 billion.
