William Blair Small Cap Value Fund

Market Review

The domestic equity market continued its upward trajectory in the third quarter, continuing the momentum from the last two quarters, driven by improving economic data and corporate earnings growth. Broadly speaking, domestic equity returns were generally positive for the first six weeks of the quarter as favorable corporate earnings growth was the main focus for investors. The market paused mid-quarter as heightened geopolitical tensions and concerns regarding the potential economic impact of two major hurricanes making landfall in the U.S. weighed on investors. The geopolitical tensions subsided in early September and the initial indications on the projected impact of Hurricane Irma, the second of the two hurricanes, appeared to be less than originally feared, helping the markets gravitate higher. Later in the month, the Federal Reserve (Fed) reiterated its expectation to raise interest rates again this year and plans to shrink its balance sheet, providing confidence that the U.S. economy continues to improve. In addition, the current administration released details on its plan for tax reform which would cut the corporate tax rate to 20%, from 35%. Both the expectations for higher interest rates and the prospects for lower tax reform were viewed positively and most major indices finished the quarter at all-time highs.

Fund Review

The William Blair Small Cap Value Fund (Class N shares) outperformed its benchmark, the Russell 2000 Value Index, during the third quarter. Outperformance versus the benchmark was primarily due to broad-based stock selection throughout most sectors. Style factors were more normalized this year as the Fund's underweight deep value stock tailwind was partially offset by the headwind created by our larger market cap bias. At the sector level, the most significant contributor to relative performance was Consumer Discretionary due to stock selection throughout most industries within the sector. Within Energy, the bulk of the relative outperformance was a result of stock selection within Equipment & Services as all of our portfolio holdings within this sub-industry outperformed. Strong stock selection within Property & Casualty Insurance drove the relative outperformance within Financials. While the contribution from Banks was neutral during the quarter, Bank stocks rebounded late in the quarter due to higher interest rates and the prospects for lower taxes. The relative underperformance within Materials, the largest detractor from relative performance, was primarily due to stock selection within Specialty Chemicals and the lack of exposure to Commodity Chemicals. Within Health Care, the lack of exposure to Biotech stocks, a lower quality segment of the market, created a significant headwind that was partially offset by positive stock selection within Health Care Equipment and Managed Care Providers. Looking specifically at stock selection, our largest contributors to relative

Outlook

While solid domestic economic data and corporate earnings growth fueled positive equity returns year-to-date, it remains to be seen if these returns are sustainable in an environment where numerous risks remain. Deregulation continues to positively impact the domestic economy while global growth continues to improve. It is unclear whether the current administration will be able to implement pro-growth initiatives such as tax reform and infrastructure spending after being unsuccessful in implementing meaningful health care reform to date. Lack of progress on these pro-growth initiatives could dampen investor optimism regarding the sustainability of higher future growth for the U.S. economy. On the monetary policy front, the Fed, after raising rates twice already this year, remains focused on the health of the labor market and achieving its 2% inflation target. While unemployment is historically low and wage growth appears to be accelerating, both positive signs for the U.S. consumer, headline inflation remains stubbornly low. The Fed may be hesitant to raise interest rates again with inflation below targeted levels, potentially signaling concern that domestic growth remains fragile. The U.S. economy is also subject to risks from abroad. A major geopolitical conflict or a deceleration of growth in Europe or China could potentially alter the trajectory of the positive economic momentum in the U.S.

While we are mindful of these variables, we are persistently seeking to identify attractive risk reward opportunities based on individual company fundamentals. From our bottom up perspective, we remain constructive on corporate earnings, albeit against a backdrop of increasing margin pressure from higher wages. As always, our focus remains on identifying quality companies at discount prices and corporate transformation opportunities, and we continue to find good ideas across sectors. Given our investment approach, we believe the Fund is well-suited to withstand a variety of market scenarios and add value over the long-term.
