

Fund Manager Commentary
 William Blair Large Cap Growth Fund

Market Summary

Returns for U.S. growth style indices were robust in the third quarter as many finished the quarter at or near all-time highs. After a start to the year that included a spike in volatility amid concerns about rising input costs and elevated valuations, returns for the second and third quarters reflected a healthy domestic economy and strong corporate performance. Specific to the third quarter, investors appeared to dismiss concerns about an escalating trade war and a flattening yield curve, which has sometimes preceded an economic slowdown. Reported U.S. GDP growth improved to 4.2%, the fastest since 2014. Earnings growth continued to be robust as businesses benefited from the corporate tax cuts signed into law late last year as well as increased corporate and consumer spending. Earnings growth for the S&P 500 improved to 26% compared to the same period in 2017 with 76% of companies topping expectations in the most recent quarterly reporting season. While input costs have risen, they have not increased as quickly as some predicted and fears that inflation could dampen the improving backdrop seem to have subsided for the time being. Unemployment remained at historically low levels, while wage growth rose only modestly. Broadly speaking, the economic and corporate backdrop remained positive and equity markets continued their upward trajectory.

Fund Review & Outlook

The William Blair Large Cap Growth Fund (Class N shares) underperformed its benchmark, the Russell 1000 Growth Index, during the third quarter.

The Fund trailed the robust market return during the quarter, with performance driven by stock specific dynamics. Information Technology stock selection was a source of weakness, due in part to our positions in Facebook and Texas Instruments. In addition, not holding Apple, the largest position in the benchmark, was a significant detractor from relative returns. The valuation multiple on the stock expanded during the quarter on higher investor confidence in Apple's ability to grow revenue from services and higher priced phones. Given the saturation of the high-end smartphone market and reliance on pricing, we continue to question the durability of Apple's growth and have opted to own other stocks in the sector where we have higher conviction. Our top owned detractor during the period was Copart (Industrials), an online auction platform for salvage vehicles, which underperformed after the company reported fiscal fourth quarter earnings that were below expectations due to issues we believe to be transitory. Other notable laggards included SBA Communications (Real Estate) and Monster Beverage (Consumer Staples).

Conversely, top contributors during the quarter included Progressive (Financials) and Amazon.com (Consumer Discretionary). Property and casualty insurer Progressive benefited from market share gains on top of strengthening industry profitability, while shares of Amazon.com advanced on strong fundamental momentum and improved profitability. Other strong performing holdings for the period included Biogen (Health Care), Microsoft (Information Technology) and Mastercard (Information Technology).

stocks present attractive risk/reward opportunities. We believe building a portfolio of companies and stocks with these characteristics will allow us to outperform in a variety of different economic scenarios.

The U.S. economy remains healthy with robust corporate and consumer optimism and leading indicators that show no signs of a slowdown. However, there are a number of risks still present that could slow or derail growth. The most prominent appears to be trade tensions with China, as both countries increased threats when the first round of tariffs were implemented in September. While the products affected by these tariffs are known, it remains to be seen how consumers and businesses will be impacted. An abrupt rise in the price of goods in either country could cause consumer sentiment to decline and be a headwind to growth. Additionally, many U.S. businesses rely on China as either a source of revenue or have aspects of their supply chain located within the country. These businesses could face disruption in the near to intermediate term.

Specific to the U.S., rising input costs and higher interest rates are both prominent risks that could dampen growth and impact valuations. Amidst a tight labor market, many companies are attempting to attract or retain workers by increasing wages which could pressure margins. Adding to expense pressures, the cost to transport goods has risen to higher-than-normal levels and the price of oil increased to over $70 per barrel at the end of the quarter. Higher interest rates could pressure corporate and consumer borrowing, and, in turn, spending.

While we remain optimistic about the U.S. economy, we believe it is important to be aware of these risks and how corporate performance could be affected. Given that we are now over nine years into an economic recovery and equity market returns have been particularly robust since early 2016, we believe it is as important as ever to focus on finding businesses with durable growth drivers and whose

DISCLOSURE

The Fund's returns will vary, and you could lose money by investing in the Fund. The Fund invests most of its assets in equity securities of large cap domestic growth companies where the primary risk is that the value of the equity securities it holds might decrease in response to the activities of those companies or market and economic conditions. Individual securities may not perform as expected or a strategy used by the Adviser may fail to produce its intended result. Different investment styles tend to shift in and out of favor depending on market conditions and investor sentiment, and at times when the investment style used by the Adviser for the Fund is out of favor, the Fund may underperform other equity funds that use different investment styles. The Fund invests most of its assets in equity securities of domestic growth companies, including common stocks and other forms of equity investments (e.g., convertible securities). Convertible securities are at risk of being called before intended, which may have an adverse effect on investment objectives. The Fund is not intended to be a complete investment program. The Fund is designed for long-term investors.

The Russell 1000 Growth Index consists of large-capitalization companies with above average price-to-book ratios and forecasted growth rates. The Index is unmanaged, does not incur fees or expenses, and cannot be invested in directly.
